Two Defeats Handed Nationals---Local Oarsmen Fail to Win

Nationals Are Beaten Twice by Athletics

Lose Morning Game, 3 to 2, While Mackmen Land Afternoon Contest in Tenth Inning, 9 to 7. Johnson Fails to Stop Champions.

By WILLIAM FERT.

Connie Mack's White Elephants left a trail of smoke and sorrow in their wake here yesterday, grabbing the morning Labor Day game, 3 to 2, and coming right back in the afternoon stronger than ever, winning one of the hardest fought battles known to science, 9 to 7.

Walter Johnson could not stop the Sleepy City gang in the final tussel, lasting ten innings, and fairly bristling with every kind of baseball. Johnson appeared to have just as much stuff as ever, and although a trifle wild at times, would ordinarily have landed his game. No explanations are advanced; everything Walter showed up was lambasted. He simply could not hand the visitors stuff they couldn't hit.

The morning game brought to light Paul Musser and Joe Engel, both of whom relieved Tom Hughes. The youngsters were unfortunate in not hitting up to the winning end of the score, for the reason that their team mates could do little against the pitching of Plank and Bender.

Nationals Fight Hard.

From the tap of the bell the Nationals displayed a lot of fight in the afternoon combat. Coming from behind against a 5 to 1 count Griffith's youngsters plowed through the enemy and knocked the count, forcing ahead in the sixth only to lose the lead in the seventh and regain it again in the eighth, they delighted the fans with their aggressiveness and never-say-die-spirit, but Johnson could not check the furious charges of the White Elephants. The Athletics broke through the Nationals' one run lead in the ninth coming up on even terms again and sent over two tallies in the tenth, more than enough to win the game.

Little Eddie Foster was the real Washington hero in the afternoon. The midge raked in three hits and played a brilliant game in the field. An unfortunate double play in the last half of the ninth robbed the Nationals of a chance to send over the much needed run. Barry and McNish also played prominent part in the defeat of the home folks.

THE AFTERNOON GAME.

Almost a capacity crowd sweltered through the ten long innings and there was plenty of encouragement uncorrupted. That Connie Mack figured his chances of winning was about 10 to 1 was not when the announcer stated that Crabbie and Lapp would be the battery for the White Elephants and oppose Johnson and Almshut.

The Nationals forced Mr. Crabbie to crawl into his hole in the fourth, when young Mr. Carroll Brown made his appearance. With Johnson pitching anything like his usual game, the runs gained off Crabbie would have been more than enough to win.

With the Athletics out of the way in the opener, Milan started the ball rolling for the home folks by drawing a walk. On the hit and run play Foster sent a single to left and Milan scooted to third. McNish popped to Lapp, Gandil sent Magner a fine drive and on the out Milan scored.

A couple of cheap hits in a row by McNish and Strunk in the fifth, second followed by a bunt and a smash from Lapp's bat which blasted its way through McNish's hands scored two runs.

Nationals Score in Fifth.

Crabbie succeeded in blanking the home folks until the fourth, when Lappie doubled to center and Gandil advanced, and McNish singled to right. McNish was hit in the side, filling the bases. Almshut watched four bad ones sail past, and Lappie was forced over the plate. At this stage Crabbie was lifted and Brown took up the burden. A wild pitch was uncorrupted and McNish scored, McNish advanced to third, Johnson sent up a high fly to Strunk, and McNish sprinted home.

Johnson looked like his old self in the Athletics' fourth, when two bloopers went down on strikes, the also kept the platter clean in the fifth, while Washington sent over the run which tied the score in the Nationals' half of the fifth.

When Brown threw the ball a mile over McNish's head Foster came all the way home from first base.

The Athletics drew a blank in the sixth, and Washington strung the lead in the second half of this round. McNish walked, and Almshut sacrificed him to second, Johnson batted the ball through Eddie McNish's shins, and McNish breezed home.

This one-run lead was soon cut down as the visitors tossed a couple of singles with a base on balls into the seventh inning, and they brought about the desired tally.

Lead in Eighth.

Once more the Nationals fought their way to a one-run margin lead, scoring their seventh and last run in the eighth inning. McNish opened with a nifty double to left, and Almshut's bunt placed him third. Johnson lifted a high fly to Strunk, and McNish scored. The Mackmen refused to take the count, and bobbed up stronger than ever in the ninth, scoring a run, and showing themselves again on even terms with the Nationals.

In the tenth three well bunched singles and a base on balls yielded two runs and the game was over right here, as Brown managed to hold the Nationals safe.

Washington's best chance to win the combat was in the last half of the ninth, when Foster led off with a clean single. McNish hit into a double play and the one chance went to a glimmering as Gandil

JEANNETTE BEATEN.

Jeff Clarke, of Joplin, Mo., Outpoints the Boston Negro Heavy-weight Boxer.

Pittsburg, Pa., Sept. 2.—Big Joe Jeannette, of Hoboken, claimant of the world's heavy-weight championship, on the strength of Jack Johnson's retirement was given the surprise of his life today when Jeff Clarke, of Joplin, Mo., decisively outpointed him in a six-round encounter. While no referee's decision was given, it was the consensus of opinion that Clarke had a shade the better of Jeannette. Jeannette, heavier than Clarke by 60 pounds, was easily held off, and his efforts to land a blow to vital territory proved futile. Jeannette landed only one clean blow, in the second round he put his left forefist to the nose, drawing blood. Clarke had all the better of the fourth and sixth rounds, while in the other rounds he was even.

THE MORNING GAME.

Tom Hughes opposed Eddie Plank. Lappie made a neat stop and play of O'Rourke's drive over second in the opening round.

Howard Shanks held down right field in place of Danny McGinnis.

Baker rapped Hughes for the first hit of the game in the second stanza—a smother to center.

With three on the sacks and two down in the second, Tom Hughes walked Eddie Plank, forcing in a run.

Baker doubled to the right-field fence in the third, and twitted his ankle turning second. But after a wait of a few moments returned to the game.

Germany Schaefer held down third base while Baker's ankle was being bandaged. Dutch looked pretty good at that.

Henry secured the first hit off Plank, a clean single to left, in the third frame.

Barry scored with ease in the fourth, when Plank lifted a high fly to Clyde Milan.

Paul Musser went into the box in the sixth inning. Barry, first up, stroked.

When Shanks singled to right in the sixth, the kid beat it for third. Frank Lappie was the boy in the pinch, with a slashing double to center, scoring Shanks in the sixth.

Chief Bender was in the box when the Nationals went to bat in the seventh.

With two on and two out in the eighth, Joe Engel, who had pitched a game in right field, replaced Musser on the mound.

AFTERNOON GAME.

Milan tried to take a big lead off the initial sack when he opened the third inning with a single and Crabbie slammed the ball to McNish's hand a dozen times. Finally, when Clyde least suspected it, a quick throw got him.

Barry made a sensational stop of George McBride's hard-hit grounder in the second, robbing the Nationals' captain of a sure single.

Collins also robbed Milan of a safe exit in the tenth when he dashed over to right field, picked up Clyde's vicious smash with his glove hand, and retired the Tennessee Flyer at first. There was a horsehoe concealed about Collins somewhere.

When Gandil drew a walk in the Nationals' ninth he promptly stole second, going into Collins' act hard that the last named dropped the ball.

Walter Johnson actually stole a base. It happened in the sixth inning. Lappie did not dream that the great pitcher would try to take any kind of a trick. He was completely fooled. Johnson slid into the bag like Ty Cobb and got there before the ball could be clapped upon him.

RED SOX TAKE TWO FROM YANKS BY SINGLE TALLY

Highlanders Lose First Game When Ford Makes Balk with Yerkes on Third.

2 TO 1 AND 1 TO 0 THE SCORES

New York, Sept. 2.—The Red Sox took both games of today's double-header with the Yanks, the first 2 to 1 and the second 1 to 0. A triple by Yerkes and a balk by Ford in the eighth inning resulted in the first victory.

The only run scored in the second game was made in the first inning on Hughes' single, McConnell's wild throw, and a sacrifice fly by Speaker. McConnell batted out after that and pitched a great game. Wood was invincible, allowing but six scattered hits. Scores:

HARRY DAVIS QUILTS.

Former Athletic Resigns; Joe Birmingham Is Temporary Manager.

Cleveland, Ohio, Sept. 2.—Harry Davis, manager of the Cleveland American League team, this morning resigned. Outfielder Joe Birmingham was temporarily appointed to fill his place.

The team's poor showing, and the fact that he has been subjected to severe criticism by the public and press are given as Davis' reason for resigning.

Los Angeles, Cal., Sept. 2.—Joe Mandot, of New Orleans and other Southern points, whipped the coast marvel, Joe Rivers, this afternoon, before the Pacific Athletic Club, at Vernon, and at the finish of the twentieth round was carried from the ring on the shoulders of his newly made California friends.

Mandot proved himself to be a worthy challenger for the light-weight title by whipping Rivers so soundly that he drove Elyon's action in awarding the decision to the French fighter was but a necessary formality.

At long range, Mandot used both right and left with equally good effect. Time after time he rocked Rivers' head with clean blows, and his body smashes, as a rule, caused Rivers to wince.

Rivers' long hope was the infatuation that he continually indulged in. He had Mandot puzzled a bit with this style.

If Mandot was a disappointment in any respect, it was in connection with a claim to carry the knock-out punch. In one round, the eighth, Mandot caught Rivers five times on the point of the chin with his right, without so much as staggering the Mexican. The nearest approach to a knock-out came just before the finishing bell in the seventh round, when Rivers caught Mandot with a short right swing on the jaw and dropped him to his knees.

The Mount Royal City crew won by a scant inch and a half.

This race was the prettiest to look at of any that have been seen in this city. Apparently outclassed in the first half mile, the powerful Analoan crew, by a tremendous sport drew up on almost even terms with its competitors. It finished third by less than half a length.

Had the race been a mile and a quarter there is little doubt that the Analoans would have won.

It was the Analoan crew that tired itself by leaving its boat house late, and being forced to row a mile upstream in five minutes to be in at the start. This tired the men before they had a chance to get into the race.

At all, and they deserve all the more credit for their plucky exhibition.

Coach Pat A. Dempsey of the much heralded Potomac Junior was greatly disappointed at the failure of his charges to come up to expectations. "They have done the same distance in twenty seconds faster time than they did on the race," he said.

It was a case of being too good for their own good. They had the lead at one time, but they let it slip away.

Again in the Junior double sculls the Potomac went down to defeat, finishing second to the Undine Barge Club of Philadelphia. Ed Mueller, stroke, and Walter Thrall, bow, put up a grand race at all, and they deserve all the more credit for their plucky exhibition.

They were defeated by only a half length, and crossed the line in the lead of the Philadelphia Ariele crew of Baltimore, and Quaker City Barge Club of Philadelphia.

New Rochelle Wins.

In the intermediate eight-oared shell the Potomac finished a full two lengths in the rear of the powerful New Rochelle Barge Club crew, and crossed the line only half a length in advance of the fast-traveling Analoans, who again came to the front with a spurt near the finish line.

The New Rochelle crew, coached by Van Vleet, was the most powerful seen on the river, and although the New Yorkers were defeated by the Ariele in the senior eight-oared shell race, in a close finish, they were one of the most impressive-looking aggregations in the regatta.

Local Crews Defeated In Middle States Regatta

Potomacs and Analoans Fail to Land an Event. Monster Crowd Sees Great Races. Gotham Cracks Star.

By IRWIN BARBOUR.

Under a torrid autumn sun and over a course as smooth as a mill-pond the annual aquatic classic of the East, the Middle States Regatta, was held on the historic Potomac yesterday.

Not the semblance of an accident marred the smooth regularity with which the big sweep and scull events were contested. The day was ideal for the sport, a gentle breeze sweeping down the stream in just enough volume to offset the tropic heat without roughening the water.

Here, there, everywhere, canoes, launches, and other small craft dotted the bosom of the broad Potomac, rising and dropping languidly with the gentle swell. Bright colors were everywhere. In nearly every canoe there was a girl, and nearly every girl carried a parasol of a different hue. Across the river, and shadowing the course, bringing the light sides of the oarsmen into stronger relief, rose the Virginia palisades, clothed in the verdure of early summer, not yet reached by the crimson touch of early fall.

Happy Parties Watch Events.

On the verandas of the various boat-houses overlooking the course were gathered happy parties, in holiday attire. The barges anchored in front of the boat-houses, were a brilliant mass of blinding colors, and the massed hundreds waved bright-hued pennants and cheered their favorites.

Overhead, Aqueduct Bridge was black with massed hundreds, looking from their point of vantage at the contests of brawn and mechanical skill which were staged beneath them. Throughout the lower end of the course, the banks of the Potomac, the river was crowded, while on the Virginia side, campers cheered the oarsmen on from their woodland and water retreats.

In all, it is estimated 10,000 people thronged the banks of the river to watch and applaud the picked oarsmen of the East compete for glory, the top of winning, and the handsome trophies which went to the successful.

At the finish line was stationed the revenue cutter "Apache," with her decks lined with white-clothed waiters, who cheerfully cheered the victorious crews. Boats from the Apache patrolled the river for the purpose of keeping small craft out of the course. Around the cutter was a flotilla of canoe men, many of which were occupied by enthusiasts for the crews of the Ariele Boat Club, of Baltimore. Whenever an Ariele crew came across the line, the visitors would threaten to capsize their canoes in their enthusiasm.

The races were late starting, but with few exceptions were well worth the wait. The crews were so evenly matched that it was on a very few occasions that there was not a close finish. Few races were outclassed in any of the events.

Not a Local Crew Wins.

From a Washington standpoint, the most unexpected part of the regatta was that no Washington crew crossed the line winner. The spectators watched crew after crew of native sons go down to defeat by small margins before the brawny and skillful invaders from Baltimore and New York.

In one of the most spectacular and bitterly contested races ever witnessed at a regatta in this city, the Potomac Junior eight was defeated in a driving finish by the Ariele, of Baltimore.

Off to a bad start, the Potomacs were forced to raise their stroke to a higher notch than their opponents, and so weakened themselves early in the race. The Ariele, however, was a different matter. They were a team, and they showed it.

Just as the last race was run, and the lock of canoists had paddled their frail vessels to the landing places, a terrific rain and electrical storm broke loose, catching a number of unfortunate rowers as they were on the river, who had been unable to reach the boat-houses. No fatalities were reported.

Trophies were distributed to the winners immediately after the closing of the local committee in charge.

The out-of-town oarsmen had their shells and sculls unloaded and were ready for shipment within half an hour of the closing of the races, and the racing boats were hauled onto a freight car backed up to the boat-house on a siding. Practically all the out-of-town oarsmen left the city last night, although a few remained to see the sights.

The regatta officials have received many compliments for their good work. Referee James A. Miller, Jr., and Starter J. O. Regan especially.

Share of praise, as well as the officials of the Potomac Boat Club, who received votes of thanks from the visiting oarsmen for the courtesies and attentions rendered them during their stay here, and the excellent management they displayed in working the regatta.
